Doctor of Naprapathic Medicine

Description of Institution:

Although Naprapathic Medicine is 110 years old, New Mexico is only the second state to license the profession. SUNM is unique in two ways: 1) it is one of two schools of Naprapathic medicine in the United States and 2) SUNM's program is offered primarily online with 75% of the program delivered on line and 25% is conducted in a face-to-face setting. While students are required to complete clinical internship activities in face-to-face setting, they also complete online assignments during the clinical internship.

The first two years (8 quarters) students participate in 6 classes per quarter. In 5 of those 8 quarters, the student attends 2 classes a week on campus and 3 of the 8 quarters, students attend 3 classes a week on campus.

At the end of the first two years (8 quarters) besides successfully passing all classes, the student must successfully pass the clinic entrance exam to progress into the third year and internship. During the third year (all 4 quarters) the students participate in 3 classes per quarter: 1 on campus and 2 online. The students must also be in the intern clinic for an additional 12 hours weekly for 50 weeks, completing a minimum of 350 Naprapathic treatments and 50 nutrition evaluation sessions with patients to qualify for graduation.

During the third year, the student must compose and defend their dissertation. After graduation and completing all requirements, the student must successfully pass the national board to be eligible to apply for licensure with the New Mexico Medical Board.

Student Demographic Profile:

The majority of students enrolled in the Doctor of Naprapathic Medicine program are adults who are looking to change their careers and are interested in pursuing a degree in Complementary Manual Medicine. Many of these students are licensed in other forms of manual or alternative medicines.
